Fast forward to the early 1900s, and the movie industry is starting to take off. Hollywood, a small town nestled in the Santa Monica Mountains, begins to attract filmmakers with its favorable climate and diverse landscapes. Directors envision the magic of the silver screen playing out against the backdrop of the Wild West.

A Glittering Partnership

As Hollywood grows, so does its need for authentic settings. The Transcontinental Railroad, now a vital mode of transportation, becomes a key element in many Western films. Its vast network of tracks, striking landscapes, and iconic depots offer the perfect settings for thrilling train robberies and daring escapes.

The collaboration between the railroad and Hollywood intensifies, leading to a series of partnerships and exclusive agreements. Rail companies grant filmmakers access to their trains and tracks in exchange for prominent on-screen exposure. The allure of train travel gains a new dimension as audiences are captivated by the romance and excitement portrayed on screen.

From Silver Screens to Real-Life Adventures

It isn't long before the magic of Hollywood attracts adventurers seeking to recreate the scenes they watch on the big screen. Enthusiasts organize trips that combine train travel with visits to iconic film locations. These excursions allow fans to step into the shoes of their favorite heroes and heroines, immersing themselves in the thrill and drama of the Old West.

Imagine riding the very same tracks that legendary Western stars once traveled. Picture yourself standing in the exact spot where an epic train heist unfolded before the camera's lens. These experiences bring a sense of excitement and nostalgia that transport enthusiasts back to a bygone era filled with cowboys, outlaws, and the sound of train whistles piercing the air.

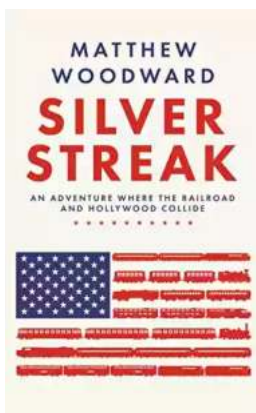

An Unforgettable Journey

An adventure where the railroad and Hollywood collide is not just about reenacting movie scenes; it's an opportunity to immerse oneself in history and the magic of cinema. As the train chugs along the tracks, passengers indulge in captivating stories about the making of famous Western films.

Stops along the way allow passengers to explore iconic movie sets and soak up the ambiance of the Wild West. The dusty streets, saloons, and majestic landscapes transport visitors to a time long gone, showcasing the rich history and imagination that collided to create the modern-day film industry.

Whether you're a film buff, a history enthusiast, or simply craving a unique experience, an adventure where the railroad and Hollywood collide promises to deliver an unforgettable journey. From the moment you step onboard, you'll be transported to a world where reality blurs with the magic of the silver screen.

It's quite extraordinary how the Transcontinental Railroad and Hollywood have intertwined throughout history. What started as a utilitarian transportation system has transformed into a symbol of movie magic and adventure. The collaboration between these two worlds has allowed audiences to escape reality and embark on thrilling journeys where cowboys, outlaws, and daring heroes come to life. An adventure where the railroad and Hollywood collide is a testament to the power of imagination and the enduring allure of the Old West.

‘Silver Streak is a delightful homage to America’s railways: a love story told through fleeting encounters unique to trains. Along the way Woodward weaves in some of TV and film’s most familiar locations, a pairing that will fire your deepest wanderlust.’

Monisha Rajesh, author of ‘Around the World in 80 Trains’

Matthew Woodward is going to America! An idea born in a school film club becomes a real-life adventure more than 30 years later. Seduced by the glamour and excitement of the 1976 film ‘Silver Streak’, Matthew always knew that one day he would embark on his own railroad journey around the United States. His travels around the America by train tell a story not just of life on the rails but also his love of modern cinema, and a sweet spot emerges through his discoveries of the people and the places where some of his favourite Hollywood films have been made. Woodward has a keen eye for detail, not just of life travelling by train, but also for the people he meets along the way. He embraces cultural differences in a zany and insightful way that only an Englishman travelling alone can achieve. Join him in his joys and dilemmas from the comfort and safety of your own armchair.
