Dream Catchers, the seventh volume created by members of POPS the Club, is an enlightening and inspiring collection of art, prose, and poetry by high-school students with a unique perspective: they have encountered the pain of the prison system--most have incarcerated loved ones, and some have themselves been in detention. By telling and sharing their stories, they not only start the process of healing but also illuminate a world many of us are unfamiliar with. In its article about the book, Kirkus Reviews said, "Overall hopeful selections inspire a desire to rethink justice and enact change."

POPS the Club offers a sacred space where students can draw, paint, write, photograph, talk, listen, and share their stories, untangling the web of shame, stigma, and sorrow they too often face.

This collection represents the work of high school students from Los Angeles, Harrisburg, Atlanta, and New York City.
