Cedric had gotten used to, even thrived in, the end of the world. Despite the infection, the world kept spinning. Even through the disaster, Cedric had finally found his place to help, to rebuild, and above all, to be a leader.

With the infected waking from their winter hibernation, Cedric must fight even harder to stay alive. While the infection spreads, the infected are changing and evolving. As the infection reaches into every place of the nation, a new light shines with hope.

A group of Marines, lead by Master Gunnery Sergeant William Pearson, are taken in by the survivors at the high school. The Marines bring news, but more importantly, they bring a mission—a mission Cedric feels that he must help them complete.
