Despite the grandeur and purpose of the pyramids, they were not spared from the ravages of grave robbers throughout history. Tomb raiders sought treasures and precious artifacts from the pharaohs' burial chambers. While some attempts were successful, many tomb robbers faced severe consequences due to mysterious curses that supposedly protected the pyramids.

Navigating the Plagues and Gods

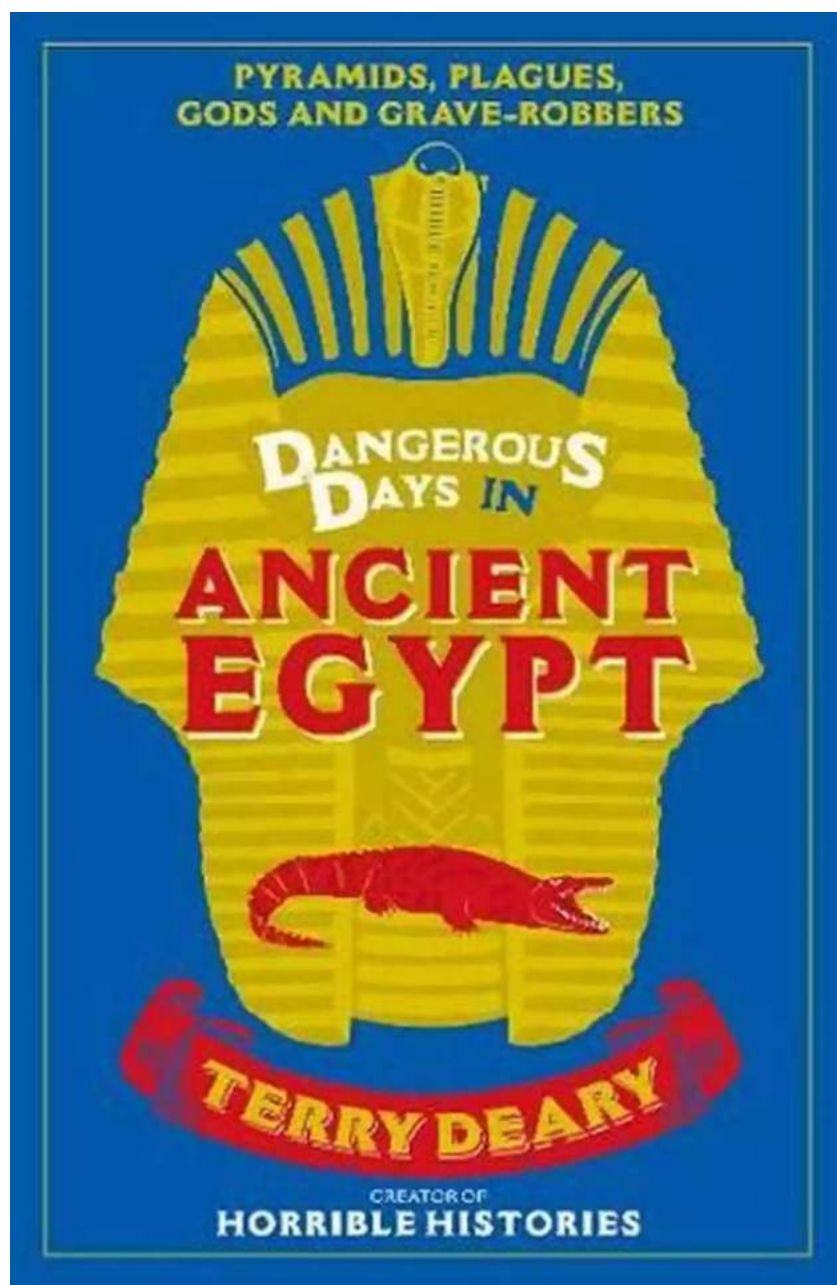

In another corner of the world, the Mayan civilization constructed their own pyramids. These structures, found mainly in present-day Mexico and Central America, served not only as tombs but also as religious centers.

An intriguing aspect of Mayan pyramids is the connection to their belief in gods and the occurrence of plagues and sacrifices. Mayans strongly believed in various gods who controlled different aspects of life. Sacrifices, including human sacrifices, were performed in an attempt to appease the gods and prevent plagues and disasters.

Think that Ancient Egypt is just a load of old obelisks?

Don't bet your afterlife on it.

Ancient Egypt should be deader than most of our yesterdays. After all it was at its height 5,000 years ago. Yet we still marvel at its mummies and ponder over its pyramids. It's easy to forget these people once lived and laughed, loved and breathed ... though not for very long.

These were dangerous days for princes and peasants alike. In Ancient Egypt - a world of wars and woes, poverty and plagues - life was short. Forty was a good age to reach. A pharaoh who was eaten by a hippo ended up as dead as a ditch-digger stung by a scorpion. Unwrap the bandages and you'll find that the Egyptians' bizarre adventures in life were every bit as fascinating as the monuments they left to their deaths.
