Driven by his passion for the natural world and his desire to connect with the spirit of the Old West, John Anderson decided to become a cowboy. He immersed himself in the rich history and traditions of the American West, studying the ways of the cowboys and learning the art of taming wild horses.

After honing his skills and gaining valuable experience working with various ranchers and cattle drives, John set his sights on a unique and monumental challenge. After months of negotiations and countless setbacks, John finally succeeded in acquiring a small herd of buffalo calves. He transported them to their new home in the picturesque mountains of Georgia, where they would be free to roam and grow in numbers under his watchful care.

A Life of Adventure and Purpose
