After Mandy and Jill's almost deadly research showed them pet spas are not a business to invest in, they were once again at a loose end as to what to do with all their money. While lunching at Joanie's one day, they run into Jennifer Winnans, an old friend from high school. In the course of their conversation, Jennifer tells Mandy and Jill her husband is a financial adviser at a hedge fund, and that she would recommend them to him for advice. Mandy and Jill are happy at the prospect of being coached by a professional as to what to do with their money.

Meanwhile, Roger the cat, who is really a re-incarnated New York City detective, suffers a terrible accident while going to the park one day. Upon waking up from his accident, he is no longer the old Roger, but a very new and confused Roger. Colin, Roger's guardian angel, has to step in to clean up this mess, otherwise, Roger will never recover.

Mandy's fortune goes from bad to worse as the financial adviser they were going to visit goes missing in action. Yet another plan to invest their money foiled. It's as though some unseen hand is preventing Mandy and Jill from investing her money.

Mandy, who had promised herself she was not going to investigate any mysteries, is so annoyed that she puts on her female sleuth hat to find out what happened. Was it a murder, or just a terrible accident? As Mandy delves deeply into this criminal mess, she discovers various characters who could have been the culprit. Everybody had something to gain by the death. Roger is also on the case, making sure that nothing bad happens to Mandy.

Find out how Mandy and a surprise investigator discover the mystery at the hedge fund.
